

APPLE TREE

Not so long ago, Apple's titanium PowerBook was at the top of everyone's wish list. But now that everyone and his assistant are toting around the shiny, wafer-thin machine, there has to be something else to separate the men from the boys. Artist Matthew Dilling, in collaboration with New York design mecca Troy, has come up with a series of custom-made, self-adhesive wood veneers that are compatible with even the latest operating systems. Our favorite is light birch, because it matches our late-20th-century Scandinavian furniture. And when we say "late-20th-century Scandinavian," what we really mean is Ikea.